

An Update on BC Ferries' Langdale Terminal Redevelopment Plan

Hello Sunshine Coast Residents,

Our team continues to work on the design options for the uplands redevelopment at Langdale terminal. And as I mentioned in my update last month, we expect to bring these options back to you for feedback in early 2019. We'll be sure to keep you posted on our engagement plans through these updates and on the project webpage at bcferries.com/about/terminal-development-planning. We've also just posted our report on Phase 2 of engagement for the terminal redevelopment on the webpage if you'd like to read it.

Project work this past month has been focused on moving different approvals forward with our partners at Transport Canada and the SCRD. We've also been working closely with the Department of Fisheries and Oceans Canada on plans for providing some improved marine habitat near the terminal. We're hoping to use the terminal redevelopment as an opportunity to enhance the health of the marine environment on the south side of the terminal with the installation of a rock reef or a similar structure.

Outside of the terminal redevelopment project, a lot continues to happen at the Langdale terminal, and you've probably noticed some colourful additions to the concrete section of the transfer bridge lately. In this update, I'd like to highlight this fantastic mural painting project, which has been coordinated by BC Ferries' SeaForward program and supported by the Sunshine Coast community at large.

For those of you who are not yet familiar, SeaForward is a BC Ferries program that shares the work being undertaken to reduce our environmental footprint, and looks to engage with and support our communities. Most recently SeaForward was the presenting sponsor at the Nicholas Sonntag Marine Education Centre for their first exciting 'Release Day'. SeaForward is passionate about its partnership with the Centre and providing Sunshine Coast residents and visitors alike with new access to inspiring and impactful marine education.

Joanna Daley, our SeaForward Manager is the face behind the program. Joanna comes to us from the United Kingdom and brings with her years of leadership and management experience in communication and engagement, with a strong focus on environmental and sustainability initiatives.

The new mural at Langdale terminal.

The mural (above) is the creation of Sarah Marceau, one of our Langdale terminal attendants and a very talented artist. Sarah and Mike Davis our Terminal Manager envisioned the mural as a way of bringing community character to our terminal and brightening an otherwise dull space. Sarah designed and sketched the mural and then our amazing community partners, staff, and customers all jumped in to paint it and bring it to life. The process has been so much fun for all involved. Hats off to Sarah for her initiative and creativity and to Mike for helping make it all happen!

We are thrilled to continue working with the community on these kinds of initiatives and look forward to building our relationships with customers and community members into the future.

I encourage you to continue sending me your questions about the Langdale terminal redevelopment project and what lies ahead at michael.pearson@bcferries.com.

Until next month,

Mike
